The concept for the Wardian Brochure seemed to be asking too much of the processes involved to come close to the designer's ambition, according to this year's category winner. Long discussions took place before anything went to print and the project demanded a strong partnership between the London company, the client and its customer. A book block with 20pp was gathered and sewn, but heavy ink coverage throughout made cutting, folding and binding a challenge. It was overcome with custom-made pressing pads and care and skill, which was not lost on the judges. One of them said of this and other entries: "This is the perfect combination of inventive and traditional finishing – fantastic and some of the most beautiful books I've ever handled."

Highly commended

Last year's category winner was pipped this year, but with client feedback as good as this, Screaming Colour can count itself a winner: "What a fantastic piece, you've exceeded our expectations." The London company helped a client pitch for work at 21 Century Fox using a playful presentation box blending concepts of the traditional movie reel and celluloid negatives. This along with other entries won rave reviews from judges: "The entries not only looked good, but felt great."
