All the numbers stacked up once again for CPI to ensure last year's highly commended in this category went one better in 2016. A fundraising review report for WWF had judges gushing "the project was outstanding". It had to be both unique and sustainable and after a few dummy runs, the final version included a cover of laminated oak board with simple lasered logo and oiled finish. Rank's annual report threw timing into the numbers mix: "Every aspect of this production was time dependant, which can lead to difficulties," noted the entry. The summary report and mailing included data processing and personalisation. All processes were carried out in-house, adhering to a demanding timetable – there was no allowance for delays. Judges concluded the "whole entry oozed quality".

What makes the report and accounts of Johnson Matthey special is the six-page cover, eight-page text and UV varnish enlivening the photography. What makes Pureprint special is this is the second year running it has scooped a highly commended gong. The report and accounts for Laing O'Rourke "has so many production values it's difficult to start on what makes it so special," explained Pureprint in its entry, which chimes with the judges' verdict: "Excellent production values throughout the entry."
